Mrs. O'Shaughnessy Explains Why She

Killed Her Husband.

New York Nov. 24.—"Yes. I shot him; shot him to save him from eternal purgatory," testified Mrs. Frances o'Shaughnessy on the witness stand today, in describins the murder of her husband, George. The effect that such an admission would have upon the twelve men who will determine her fate appeared to be fur from her thoughts as she continued:

"Then I went to where he lay on the floor and kissed him. I stood over him and said a prayer for his soul. Then into the hall I went and called to Mrs. Geyer 'George is gone. She asked 'Already?' and I answered 'Yes, gone forever.' I left him lying there and went into the street and found a policeman and told him that I had just the anything else until I was in the Tombs."

The woman told the story without a diaver or a tear and in a voice so low that the stenographer had to read her anything else until I was in the Tombs."

Mrs. O'Shaughnessy Explains Why She
Killed Her Husband.

Letters she herself wrote to her husband frame as by far the more lathry-mose. Mrs. Stokes, the millionaire's wife of less than a year, and Mrs. Stella Singleton, sister of Miss Graham srms has and wife of a wealthy western mining and wife of a wealthy western mining man, were among the persons who succeeded in getting into the court-room, Five hundred failed to do so. Robert M. Moore, the girls' counsel, asked Stokes if Miss Graham were from not a giri of eighteen, in short dresses, when he met her in 1905.
"She told me she was twenty-four; her skirts came to her boot tops," Stokes replied.

Stokes admitted that his memory was bad, especially "on dates," that he took Miss Graham automobile riding, and bought bonbons for her. He was then asked about her visit to his country place at Lexington, Ky., in 1907. She went there with her sister, he said, and stayed there two or three nights.

Letters showing Stokes' relations with Miss Graham during 1907 and 1908, including the one in which he said he was a "cross, crabbed old cove," were made a part of the record. Among the missives were letters showing that Stokes sent her money while she was in Paris. She had left the Hotel Ansonia, which he owned, owing a bill of $518.

The afternoon session closed with Stokes still on the stand.

Mr. Stokes testified that he had gone to the apartment on the night of June 7 to obtain a package of letters he had written to Miss Graham.

"Miss Conrad looked foolishly around for something to happen," Stokes continued, "and Miss Graham came creeping along the parlor with a revolver in her band. She pointed it at me and accused me of blackening the reputations of her relatives.

"She taked so fast I could say nothing. Then she told me to sit down and sign a statement admitting the slander. I refused to do so, and she said that many prominent men had disappeared just as I was about to do. Ethel then told me to write my check for $25,000 or that I would never leave the place alive.
